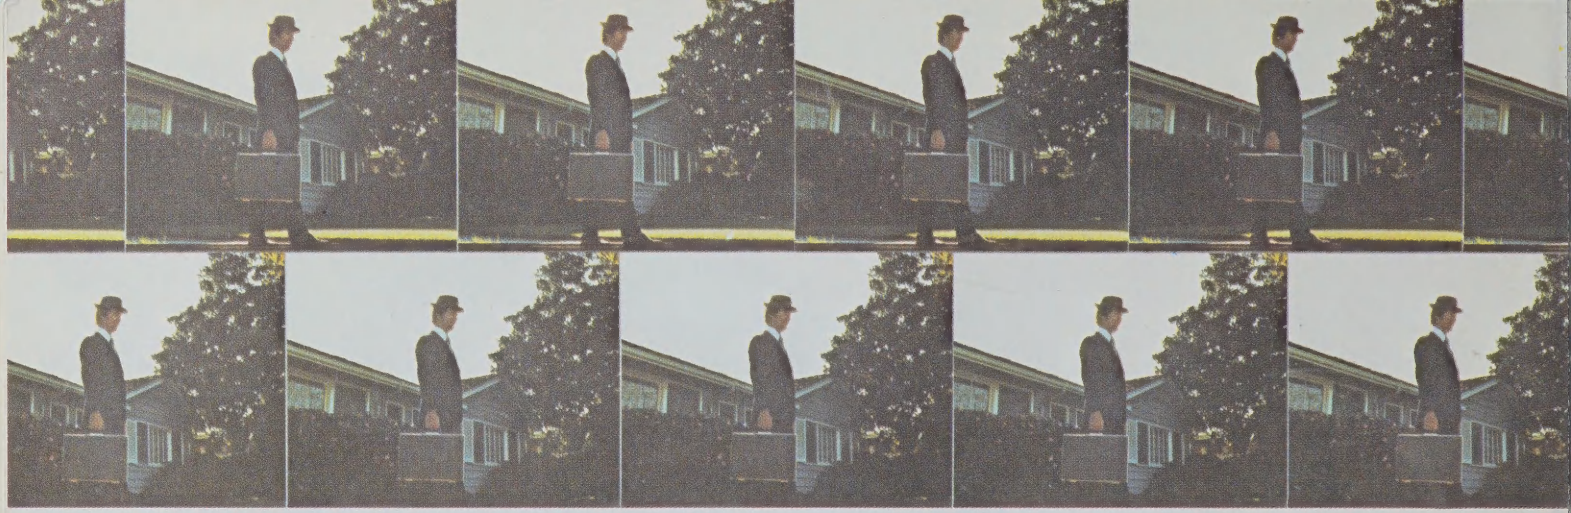
UNIVERSITY OF ALBERTA

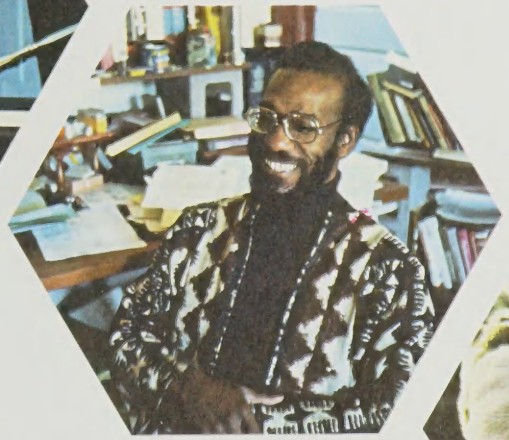
Once upon a time, at least in books,
All fathers were the same, at least in looks.



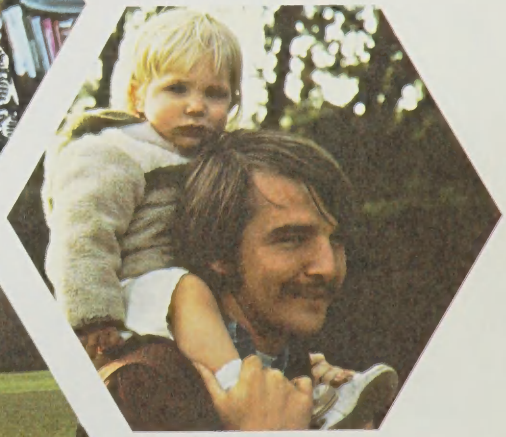
They marched off to work together,
Each with a different name,
Same clothes, same cars, same time each day.
Almost everything was the same!

But – now!
My father is different.

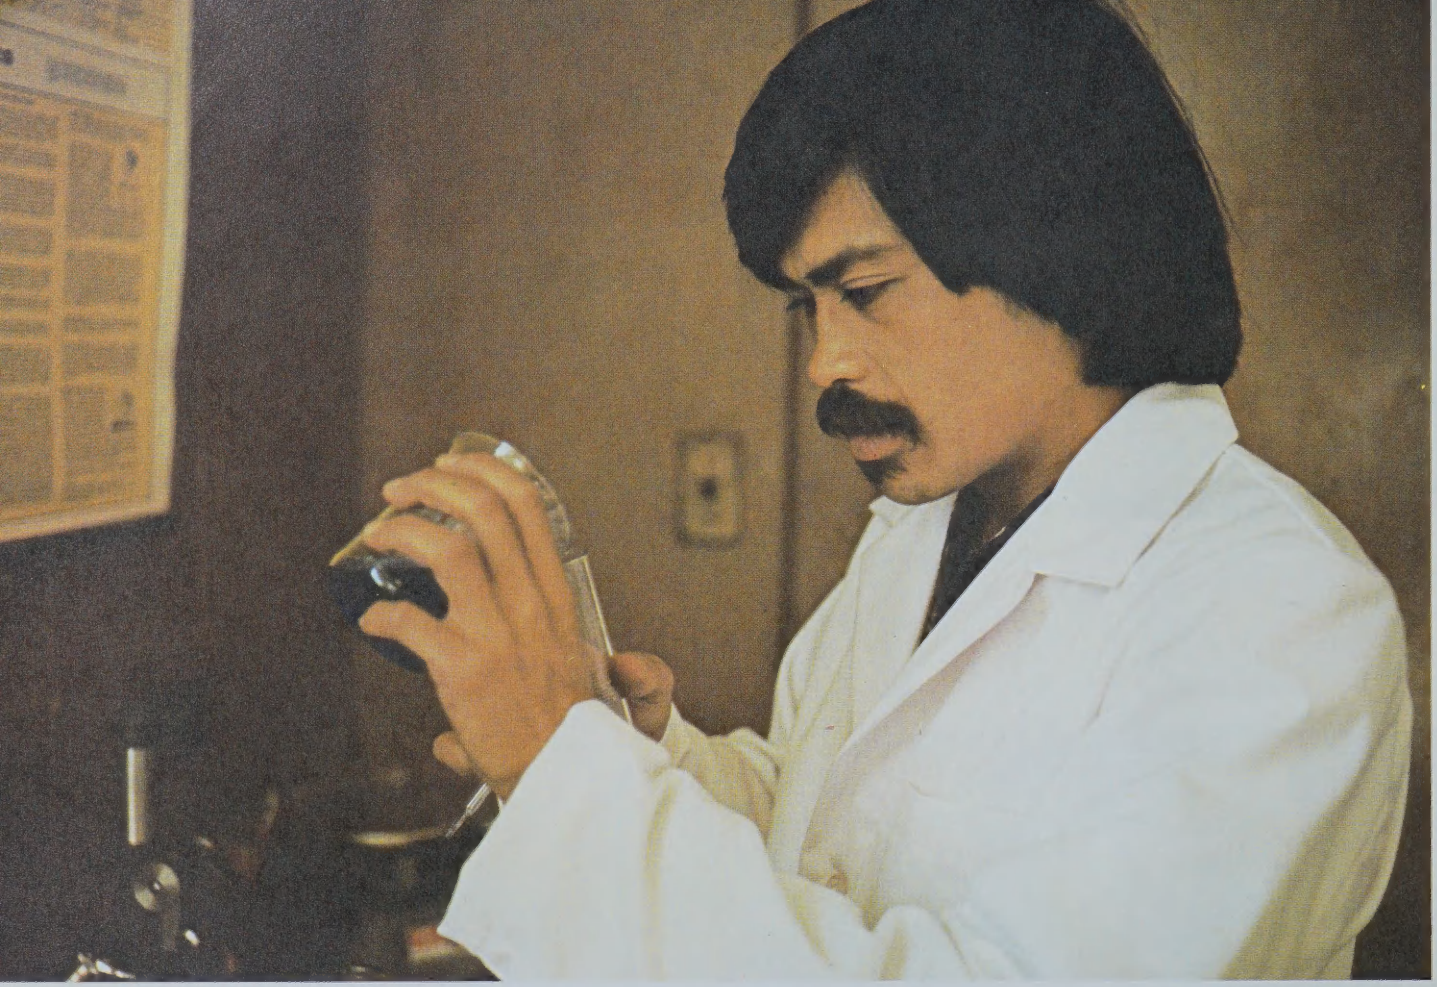
And so is mine!



My father is nicer!



Mine has more time!



Just look at his white coat!
My father works in a lab.

Look at that taxi!
My father drives a cab!

My father works at home.
He writes books all day long.

Mine travels everywhere
To sing the world a song!

My father has an office
Where he works long and late.

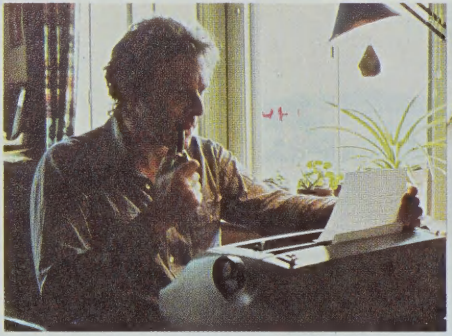
It's nice to help my father
Wash up the dinner plates!

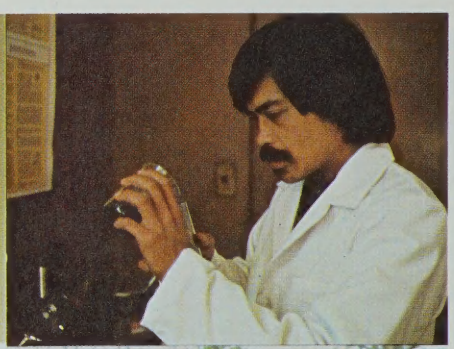
My father owns a store.
Just look at what he can bring!

My father works in everyone's house.
He fixes everything!

Yes, fathers are sweet,
And fathers are neat.
And some can sweep us off our feet!

And some are young,
And some are old.
But when all the rhymes are told,





Fat or small,
Short or tall,
A father can do most anything
At all!
